Entered at the Postoffice at Newberry, S. C., as 2nd class matter.
E. H. AULL, EDITOR.

Tuesday, July 21, 1914.

We publish a card today from Sheriff Rector, of Greenville, but the article to which he refers was not written for The Herald and News but was copied from the daily papers and purported to be a news story from Greenville.

Mr. Norwood is reported to have said in his speech at Greenville on Saturday that any "educated" man that would vote for Cole. Blease is a "skunk." That is rather an ugly word for a refined and educated gentleman to use. The one consolation in it is that his saying so does not make it true.

Newberry can boast of having the best mill villages in the State. It is admitted that they are populated by the best class of mill people. A Mr. Norwood, of Greenville, calls this class of citizens "skunks" and a "scurvy lot." They will resent it to a man all over the State, and it will make other votes for Blease. The opposition is getting desperate.

The "South Carolina Dollar" means South Carolina dollars at the 'Prisco show.—Charleston Post.

South Carolina certainly should be represented at this exposition and is going to be. The business men of the State are in behind the effort and it is bound to succeed. It should have the hearty endorsement and encouragement of the press of the State. Less politics and more constructive business methods is the proper slogan.

Editor Aull doesn't like the looks of Mayor Jennings, forgetting that this senatorial campaign is not a race for beauty.—Greenwood Journal.

No, to be perfectly frank with you, we do not. Some other paragraphers took up the same point and intimated that "Lang" was too formidable for us. That is the very point. He is not as "formidable" as he had been painted. Oh, well, that is simply our opinion. Maybe "Lang" will proceed to hurl ugly epithets at us for having an opinion. So long as he calls us what we know we are not we are going to say nothing. The people have our permission to elect whomsoever they please.

The Columbia Record is surely hard up. It sends some one to the files of The Herald and News and copies an editorial from it about the details of the one mill tax in which The Herald and News did not agree with the governor as to the details of the appropriation. That was in 1913 and not 1914 as accredited. We still think that it is a good idea to let part of this one mill tax be at the disposal of the county board of education instead of all of it in the hands of the State board. Unless you make the State the unit for the expenditure of all the school fund and in this way give to each child the same amount of money and the same length of school term, and when you do this you do away with incentive for individual effort. State Superintendent Swearingen agreed with Gov. Blease in the view that the one mill tax should be a State board fund. At the 1914 session the one mill levy was made as Gov. Blease recommended and as Mr. Swearingen desired. The Record is certainly hard up for something. It must be realizing that Gov. Blease sure enough has the senatorial toga and is gone with it.

How are we going to get the truth about these campaign meetings. For instance on their own account some of the correspondents say that the Anderson meeting was anti-Bleas and pro Smith, with Pollock a favorite, and describe the anti-Bleas procession as a tremendous affair. Then they quote Governor Blease as saying from the stand that the procession included 89 men and 23 women, while the governor's friends had given out 600 Bleas badges and were unable to supply the demand. It is indeed difficult to tell what to believe and what not to believe.—Yorkville Enquirer.

There were several hundred wearing Bleas badges and here and there you could see a cotton bloom as a button hole bouquet. Some young ladies bore a couple Smith banners. But there are a lot of people who object to wearing the badge of any man. And badges and cotton blooms do not always indicate votes. The sentiment of the Anderson crowd, we should say, was about equally divided between Bleas and Smith with possibly a pre-dominance of Bleas supporters. But you should remember that all the cotton mill operatives were at work and so were many farmers.

Postmaster General Burleson recommends that automobiles be used in place of horses in the rural delivery of the mails. The recommendation is a good one but something will have to be done to improve the condition of the roads before the plan can be successfully carried out. The two most important questions before the people today are the improvement of our rural schools and the building of better roads.

You may talk about the improvement of the State and law and order and almost everything else as much as you please but until something is done to improve the rural schools and the public roads in the country there is not going to be much change for the better.

In this section of the country the cities and towns have grown to the disadvantage or rather at the expense of the rural districts. There is need for improvement of rural life conditions and in this age with all the modern conveniences rural life can be made more desirable than city life, but in order that this section may come into its own these conditions must be improved and the first thing is to get better schools and better roads. In order to improve these conditions the more fortunate must help the less fortunate and the only way to equalize the burden is for State and national aid to be given.

His Tender Side.

Greenville Piedmont.

Governor Blease is a many-sided man and some of his sides are not admirable. But even his worst foes will agree that there is heart and sympathy in the following beautiful letter of condolence he sent to Mrs. A. B. Knowlton, whose husband, a distinguished physician of Columbia, died Sunday morning:

"I desire to express to you my deepest sympathy with you and your family in the death of your distinguished husband. In his untimely taking off, South Carolina has sustained a heavy loss. In all the history of our State it has been given to few men to live such a life of brilliant and consecrated service in the great profession which has for its aim the alleviation of human suffering. Possessing a skill which was recognized throughout the country, a trained mind and a big heart, he combined these high qualifications, as rarely they have been combined, with an executive ability which gave to Columbia and to South Carolina one of their great institutions. His death will be sincerely mourned, but the good which he has done will live after him, and I know that the greatness of his life will help you to bear the heavy burden and that the love and tenderness in which his memory will be held by those whom he has served will help console you so far as human sympathy can console in such bereavement."

That letter reveals one side of Cole. L. Blease and explains somewhat the remarkable hold he has on many of his followers. Some of them refuse to see any other side of the chief executive. In not a few humble homes in South Carolina, where death had been and left a burden of sorrow, Cole. Blease has been a visitor who tenderly tried to lighten that burden. People so comforted are more or less blind to his public record.

Compulsory Education.

Editor The Herald and News:

When we hear of the wonderful results of compulsory education in England, Scotland or Germany we may argue "but those are foreign countries and what would suit them might not suit the United States." When Massachusetts and California report that they do not want to get rid of compulsory education which is bringing about such progress, we still have the old time argument left that we can't have it in South Carolina because while educating ourselves we might educate the negro. But, now Mr. Editor, when reports from our own Southern States show that compulsory education of the white citizen is his defense against the negro who is already flocking into schools, it seems that only the negro could fear compulsory education of the Southern white man.

Here is what Hon. O. V. Gilbert, assistant superintendent of public instruction, in Kentucky, answers in a letter of the 8th inst. as to results in his State:

"First. We not only believe, but we know that the State has made greater educational progress under compulsory education law than before such a law.

"Second. Yes, the negroes were quite generally attending school before the compulsory law.

"Third. The compulsory law has increased the attendance of the whites greater proportionally than the negroes." E. H. Blake, Greenwood, July 20, 1914.
